Coleman Council Has a Very Quiet Session

The regular fortnightly meeting of the Coleman town council took place in the council chamber on Tuesday evening of this week. There were present Mayor Ouimette and Aldermen Gate, Daugeau, Johnston, Swann and Holmes, though the mayor was later called out of the meeting and Deputy Mayor Holmes took his place.

After the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, a number of communications were received and dealt with. These included a letter from H. G. Goodeve drawing the attention of the council to the fact that the stable on the Porter property was out on the lane at the rear of the lot to the extent of about three feet; also that a ditch ran along the centre of said lane, making it almost impassible. Mr. Goodeve stated that he was going to commence building operations in that vicinity in a short time and asked the council to have this lane opened up so that it could be used. The matter was referred to the Public Works Committee with power to act.

Another letter was from W. Cowan, secretary of the Football Club, who formally asked the use of the athletic grounds for his club during the season. It was decided to grant the request on the same terms as prevailed last year.

A number of accounts were then presented and dealt with by the various committees.

The regular monthly reports were received from the fire chief, the chief of police, and the secretary-treasurer.

The owners of the Ritchie dairy made application for a rebate on the license collected from them. It was pointed out that this dairy consisted of only two or three cows, and a license of $25 seemed rather high. This application was laid on the table till next meeting.

The chairman of the License and Police Committee submitted a schedule of fees to be charged as licenses for various classes of business. One of the most important items under this head was the fee for wrestling and boxing matches held in a licensed opera house. It seems the present rate is $100. When the License Committee were compiling their schedule of rates they left this item for the council to decide. There was considerable discussion on this point. Someone suggested that the license be placed at $10, and Alderman Johnston expressed his satisfaction with that fee. Alderman Gate thought that $25 was about right, while Alderman Swann suggested that the rate be $10 for wrestling matches and $25 for boxing bouts.

Alderman Johnson: "You are making enough out of the opera house now, with all the licenses, taxes, etc., that we have to pay, and I think that ten dollars is quite enough for either boxing or wrestling. You gentlemen are only expressing your own opinions, anyway, but we are here to represent the people and I know I am expressing the opinion of the majority of the ratepayers."

"Well, let us have a motion and settle the matter," said Acting Mayor Holmes, after considerable discussion.

Alderman Johnston thereupon moved that the license fee be $10 for wrestling and boxing exhibitions, and this motion was seconded by Alderman Daugeau.

Alderman Swann moved in amendment that the rate be $10 for wrestling, and $25 for boxing. The amendment was seconded by Alderman Gate.

When the question was put to a vote there was a tie, there being only four aldermen present besides the acting mayor. The latter was called upon to give the casting vote and he decided in favor of the amendment.

"We are just losing $75 on that," said Alderman Gate.

"No, we're gaining $25," retorted Alderman Johnston, "for no person ever paid the old rate."

Friday, May 1st, was set apart as clean-up day.

Alderman Daugeau drew attention to the manner in which manure was permitted to lie around West Coleman and asked that some action be taken to have conditions in this respect improved. The matter will be brought to the attention of the Board of Health.

Council then adjourned.

Teachers' Convention

The fifth annual convention of the Alberta Educational Association will be held in Wesley church, Lethbridge, April 14-16. The opening session is in the morning, when, after addresses of welcome by the mayor and chairman of the school board and suitable replies by selected delegates, the minister of education, Hon. J. R. Boyle, will address the gathering. In addition to the various meetings in sections when subjects suitable to primary, secondary and high school work will be discussed, there will be two lectures by James Robertson, Esq., C.M.G., L.L.D., on the subjects, "A development policy for Alberta" and "The teacher's place and power in the community." A further specially attractive item of the program will be an illustrated lecture, "Art, Venice and the Venetian Painters" by Prof. Maria L. Sanford, University of Minnesota. The convention will close Thursday morning, when, after the election of officers Prof. Sanford will give the final address on "Moral power in the school-room." The following members of the Coleman staff are planning to attend: Principal W. S. Black and the Misses McArthur, Ethel McDonald, V. J. McDonald and Ethel Cogland. According to the school law, when a teacher attends this convention he or she is not required to teach any day of the convention week. Those not attending will resume their school work on Tuesday, 14th.

Play Tennis In Two Weeks

The annual meeting of the Coleman Tennis Club was held last Friday evening at the offices of the Coal Company and arrangements for the coming season were made. Mr. O. E. S. Whiteside was re-elected president and Mr. W. Bullock vice-president. Messrs. McKeagan and Foote are the grounds committee; Messrs. Dan MacAulay, W. Bullock and H. C. McBurney form the managing committee and Mr. H. H. Roberts was appointed secretary. The financial report shows that the club is even with the world, and as there is every prospect of a large membership, including several new members, the courts can be kept in first class shape, and good play for the season is ensured. The grounds committee is already busy, and as soon as the weather permits the courts will be put in order and it is expected that play will be in full swing in a couple of weeks.

Robert Dunn Alderson and Miss Jeannie McKenzie, both of Hosmer, were united in marriage in the institutional church by Rev. T. M. Murray, this (Thursday) morning. David Bisset and Miss Pricilla Baxendale, also of Hosmer, acted as groomsmen and bridesmaids. Mr. and Mrs. Alderson left on the Flyer for points east. The groom is one of Coleman's old timers, and The Bulletin joins his many friends in wishing him and his bride every happiness.

The services in St. Alban's church next Sunday are as follows: At 7.30 a.m. Holy Communion; at 10.30 the subject will be, "Motives of Holy Communion"; at 3 p.m. children's service and baptism; and at 7 p.m. Evensong and sermon.

THE LIMITED.

Courage of Two Youngsters, and One of Them a Tenderfoot.

By SEWARD W. HOPKINS.

Dick Prescott sat huddled in his chair at the desk, his eyes staring at the receiver as though the innocent little piece of mechanism had suddenly developed reason. His right hand clutched a revolver, and his left arm convulsively around his left breast as though he was feeling something in side.

"It can't be possible!" he said once then again. "It's a lie. I know it is. Julie Grison is a gang of robbers? No! It must be a hideous mistake."

But the words as they had come in date and dishes to him from Dick Prescott, could neither be misunderstood nor effaced. And he knew Loomis so well—Loomis wouldn't say a word about a woman that could wrong her. And besides, Loomis did not know that Prescott loved her. So the element of jealousy would not play a part.

But there was the message, repeated to make an error impossible:

Dick Prescott, Cow Cornered. You will receive package containing money from express messenger on limited. Twenty thousand dollars for James Reel. You will be escorted by Julie Grison, leader band gang, who will take you up. Take Grison coming later with gang.

LOOMIS.

It wasn't a long message. Prescott laughed half loudly and half repeated it.

He got up and walked nervously to and fro.

"Loomis wouldn't lie," he said.

And he saw how it had come so far. I've got the package. Loomis went through on time. And now—

He laughed again, but it was a strange, wild laugh.

"So this is the girl who was so nice and content and even affectionate; the pretty girl I saved from drowning only a month ago; the girl whom I was going to ask—Suppose I had! Suppose it was her husband, and with Jake Grison was coming to rob! Suppose it! I can't suppose it. It's a—"

He stopped at his desk again and looked down.

"I've got it right," he said. "And Loomis wouldn't lie. But how did he learn it? How can he know?"

His nervousness was again intense. He couldn't leave. His pony wasn't far away, but the eastbound express would pass soon, and then the switch must be turned for the night local. There was no one else. The ranchman, one horse station had a porter daytimes, but at night, when all the devilry took place, the country did not think he needed any one.

His brain was on fire. He had the package, and the girl he loved was coming with a gang to take it from him.

A sudden noise at the window made him jump. His revolver leaped from his pocket.

"Don't shoot me!" said a quick, nervous voice. "Dick—Mr. Prescott, you received a package from the limited. You—"

"No," he said, facing the sun-fanned face that looked in at the window. A glance told him she carried a rifle.

"You did not?"

"No," he said. "The limited went through without stopping."

"But it was sent—I know it was sent. I know it, I tell you."

"No, I received no package."

For a moment she looked at him steadily, and then a perfect smile dashed across her face and disappeared again. With an agility for which she was far famed she sprang in at the window.

"Dick Prescott," she said sternly, "your face tells a different story. You did get that package for Mr. Reel."

"Miss Grison, I—"

"Stop! I have misunderstood you, and I make few mistakes in men. Dick Prescott, you have opened my eyes to-night. I thought you were a man—a gentleman. You have proved me to be wrong."

She stood leaning on her rifle, and her great, fearless eyes looked steadily into his.

He felt himself trembling. How was he to let her know that he had no unmanly man? He must do something. Once more Loomis was proved correct. The package had come, then she had come. The next would be the worst gang of cutthroats in Arizona, with Jake Grison at their head.

"Julie," he said, "I am not well. I am going out for air."

"Yes," she said, "you don't look well. Come outside."

He started to the door.

"Stop where you are!"

He finished a glance back. He could not pretend to be frightened. He was looking into the muzzle of her rifle.

"Dick Prescott, throw up your hands! Quick! You haven't a moment to lose."

Her eyes were as steady as any man's of the southwest. Prescott was no coward, and he could not shoot the girl he loved for a hundred times $20,000.

Up went his hands.

There was a peculiar sound in her throat as she stepped to his side. With fingers that seemed to have had no practice she took away his revolver, swept her hand under his coat and took out the package.

"Now, Dick Prescott, obey every word of mine or I will shoot you. Stand still a moment."

She stepped to the desk. A few effects had sent this message along the line.

Agent at Cow Cornered. Send result on express.

"Now, Dick," she said, "walk out quietly. Leave things as they are here."

"But, Julie—my good name—my reputation!"

She laughed harshly.

"Your good name! Oh, Dick!"

She pointed sternly. "She walked ahead of her. It was a dark night. The single lamp in the station was the only light visible. But the girl knew the way in the dark as well as Prescott. She ordered him to walk to his horse. He found her own tethered near it.

"Release both horses," she said. He obeyed.

His heart was bitter. He could not fight her. He might as well do as she commanded. He had little hope for mercy from the gang, but she had the money.

"Mount," she said. "Now ride to that clump of mesquite."

He rode in silence, she following.

They sat there in their saddles. It seemed to him, for hours. Then the racket of the express could be heard and at the same time the pounding of horses' hooves.

"Look!" she said tensely.

He knew the voices and did not need to see.

"Where's the whelp gone with the awg?" asked the voice of Julie's uncle.

"He can't be far. He couldn't expect us. Lucky we got the girl shut up."

The express was coming! The lights from the train were poured into the station.

"Come!" she whispered.

He could have shouted. Somebody would have heard and reported it.

Something in his mind. He didn't think clearly. But what was this about a girl being shut up?

They rode swiftly, first along a gulch. Then, crossing the stream, they swung in the saddle and spoke again.

"Dick," she said, "for the sake of old times I am giving you a chance for a train. They looked me in the school-house—me! I hurried as fast as I could. But you—have gone wrong. Dick—I was beginning to love you. Then, crossing the stream, they swung in the saddle and spoke again.

WAITING FOR THE DROP.

When It Didn't Come It Got on His Nerves.

A traveling man stopped at an Indiana hotel. The proprietor told him he had not a room in the house. The man protested. He must have a room. Finally the proprietor told him there was a room, a little room separated by a thin partition from a nervous man, a man who had lived in the house for ten years.

"He is so nervous," said the landlord, "I don't dare put any one in that room. The least noise might give him a nervous spell that would endanger his life."

"Oh, give me a room," said the traveler. "I'll be so quiet he'll not know I'm there."

The room was given the traveler. He slipped in noiselessly and began to disrobe. He took off one article of clothing after another as quietly as a burglar. At last he came to his shoes. He unloosed a shoe and then, manlike, dropped it.

The shoe fell to the floor with a great noise. The offending traveler, horrified at what he had done, waited to hear from the nervous man. Not a sound.

He took off the second shoe and placed it noiselessly upon the floor, then in absolute silence, finished undressing and crawled beneath the sheets.

Half an hour went by. He was deeply into a doze when there came a tremendous knocking on the partition.

The traveler sat up in bed trembling and dismayed. "Wh-wh-what's the matter?" he asked.

Then came the voice of the nervous man:

"Hang you! Drop that other shoe will you?"—Philadelphia Press.

A Lightning Change Artist.

A young minister was invited to spend his vacation at the summer home of a wealthy member of his congregation.

The little daughter watched the young man very closely during the visit and one morning sat down beside him and began to draw on her slate.

"What are you doing?" the minister inquired.

"I'm going to draw your picture," replied the child.

The young man sat very still, and the little girl worked away. He was deeply interested in the work of the original.

"I don't like it very much," she said.

"I guess I'll put a tail on it and call it a dog,"—New York Evening Post.

His Synonym For Quick Retreat.

In the sixth grade the teacher was mentioning a boy about Napoleon's evasive evasion of Russia and the subsequent retreat from Moscow.

"What did the French do then?" she asked.

"They ran away," replied the boy.

"Yes, that is what they did," said the teacher, "but 'ran away' is hardly the correct phrase to use. What should you have said?"

The boy's face lighted up with understanding.

"They beat it!" he exclaimed quite proudly.—Kansas City Journal.

Didn't Know When to Stop.

"The great men are all dead," she said with evident regret.

"But the beautiful women are not," he replied, looking earnestly at her.

"Of course," she added after a moment's reflection, "I always except present company."

"So do I," he said.

Then she asked if he would be good enough to conduct her to her husband.—Judge.

Knew His Ground.

"You say this man is no chicken stealer?" inquired the judge.

Interesting "By Product" of the Prohibition Campaign

Practically every Bulletin reader is of course aware that the Temperance and Moral Reform League of Alberta has set itself the task of making Alberta dry by the end of 1915; that the League has secured the services of three of the most capable and clever men in the country as leaders of this campaign; that a fund of one hundred thousand dollars is being raised for the purpose; and that never in the history of Canada has a prohibition campaign been launched with the same determination and strength of organization that is manifest at the present time.

All this by way of prelude.

In addition to the above, every voter in the province of Alberta will be asked to sign a pledge to the effect that he will vote only for such parliamentary candidates as will undertake to support any prohibition measures that may be submitted to the Legislature. And it is to this phase of the campaign that The Bulletin now draws attention.

As a starter, the temperance people are trying to secure the signatures to this pledge of at least one hundred voters in every constituency of Alberta. They have succeeded in accomplishing this end in practically every electoral district in which the campaign has been launched to date, and it now seems as though they would probably meet with similar success in the other constituencies—or most of them.

Leaving aside altogether for the moment the merits or otherwise of this prohibition agitation, what a stupendous effect on the political life of the Province will this pledge of political independence have! Temperance orators have always been most adept at drawing dark blue word pictures of what they choose to call "The Finished Product of the Liquor Traffic," and regaled us with burrowing descriptions of the accomplished booze artist who gets his feet full of tangle-foot and his system full of sheep dip on pay day and then staggers home to beat up the family. Suppose we grant for the sake of argument that these pictures are true to life.

Let us draw another one and compare.

Take the educated man, the man who goes to church two or three times on Sunday, who heads all charitable subscription lists, who offers the longest—and loudest—prayer in church, who never even takes a squint at the shrine of Bacchus, let alone worship there.

BUT

Who will blindly, ignorantly, stubbornly and persistently vote with his party every time he approaches a ballot box, no matter what skulduggery his particular party may be up to at the time; who would sacrifice his own happiness and that of his family as well for the sake of party; who takes politics into his church, his lodge, his business, his social circle and his home, who invariably places party before principle—and seems to be proud of what he has done.

The temperance orators tell us the booze artist will get a front seat and a short poker unless he is reformed. But what about the other fellow we have described? Is he not as great a menace to society and to posterity as the other? The one comes right out in the open, takes on a load of joy water, throws off all restraint—and whoops-er-up. The other becomes intoxicated with political bunk, and it would make a snake sea sick to follow his meanderings as he twists this way and that in a futile effort to abjectly serve a political party that doesn't care two straws for him and at the same time hang on to his counterfeit reputation as a broad-minded, strong-minded and charitably disposed church worker and citizen of the land.

We are not making a plea for the booze artist, neither do we wish to belittle the cause of the temperance advocates. We hold that any person, or any body of people, have a perfect right to work and fight for that which they believe to be right.

But we merely wish to emphasize the fact that if the temperance people do not accomplish their object and turn Alberta dry in 1915, if they do succeed in getting one hundred men in each electoral division of Alberta to forego their party allegiance pro tem and place principle before party they will have accomplished a very great deal surely, and will have just cause for self-congratulation.

The system of government by party may be alright in theory. But in actual practice it too often transforms men into traitors to their own best interests and turns their backbone into gelatine. Taken by and large, this temperance campaign is likely to have a far-reaching effect in more ways than one; and it will be interesting to note what happens when some of the temperance workers themselves are corralled in broad daylight and confronted with the above mentioned pledge.

Just Observations

A New York despatch says that over thirty women have lost their lives in the suffrage campaign to date in England. Premier Asquith will probably take a night off and celebrate when he reads that item.

The Canadian bathtub trust has decided to boost prices, and simultaneously a bill is introduced in the House of Commons to prevent the pollution of streams. Evidently the bathtub people have been doing some lobbying.

A Japanese vice-admiral has been arrested and will be court-martialed on a graft charge. Now, then, where are all those people who have been trying to make us believe that the Japanese would never become actually civilized according to our western standards? It looks from the above as if they were mighty adept pupils.

Up in Edmonton a week or so ago a young girl was sent to jail for a year because she stole a couple of hundred dollars to help out a missionary with whom she was in love. The ends of justice no doubt must be served, but it seems too bad that there is no (legal) way in which the same justice can be meted out to the man who apparently made love to a young girl, knowing perfectly well that he would not be in a position to marry her and provide a home for her for many years to come.

A Calgary daily paper tells us that an American firm has bought up all the available supply of wool in Western Canada. Oh, well, a Yankee dollar will buy just as much beefsteak for the sheepman as will any other kind of a dollar, and there will probably be enough wool left in the West for the politicians to pull down over the eyes of the electors and plaster there with a liberal supply of mush.

Over in British Columbia, the Province that is ruled by Dick McBride with the aid of divine providence, and Bill Bowser, the government does not know what to do with the several thousand Doukhobors who have located there. Since the Douk is fond of going about in the clothes that Adam wore, might send pictures of him throughout the country as advertisements of the balmy climate over on the sloppy slope. Nothing like turning our disadvantages into some profitable use, you know.

Out of eight hundred British immigrants who arrived in Toronto recently not one farm hand could be secured by a number of farmers who were waiting when the train came in. Good board, a fair cash stipend and family treatment were offered the men in return for their services, but the answer received from almost all of them was "Nothing doing, don't cherno." And the Ontario farmers are wondering what was wrong. Shucks! The answer to that riddle is easy. It was probably that threat of "family treatment" that did it.

A man who had evidently travelled a great deal dropped into one of the local hotels the other evening and at once began to demonstrate the fact that he was a most inveterate kicker. After he had been served with dessert, he turned surlily to the petit waitress and demanded: "Why do you call this dish 'ice-cream pudding'?" "If you do not like it I will bring you something else," replied the polite attendant. "Oh, it's alright; what I object to is that it should be called 'ice-cream pudding' when there is no ice-cream served with it." "Yes, sir," was the quiet reply, "but that's just our name for it. Lots of dishes are served that way. We can't bring you a cottage with cottage pudding, you know." Whereupon the chronic kicker subsided into silence.

In Calgary a while ago a hitherto respectable and law-abiding young man waylaid a girl on a dark street and robbed her of her pocket-book—or tried to do so. He was apprehended and sentenced to six months in the pen, with twenty lashes. Immediately there was an uproar, and columns of letters were printed in the newspapers protesting against such a harsh sentence being carried out. The presiding magistrate tried to justify his action by stating that the accused probably "intended" a criminal assault upon the girl, in addition to taking her pocket book.

Now, what do you think of that?

The doctor turns the X-ray on us and tells us pronto what is wrong with our innards—and charges us fifty dollars. But this J.P. goes the M.D. one better. He turns his penetrating gaze upon this youth, tells him what he intended to do, and then hands out six months and twenty lashes for said "intention." That magistrate is probably working on the theory that since hell is said to be paved with good intentions, then the man with bad intentions should be sent to a worse place—and so sends him to Lethbridge for six months. Which is going some.

Again Reuben hesitated. "I wasn't looking that way, but I didn't see or hear anything until Mr. Franks and my sister entered the room."

You heard them talking, what did they say?

Reuben smiled. "I don't know," he replied.

After a few more questions he was allowed to go, and Inspector Heriot entered the witness-box and described how he had been called up by telephone from Scotland Yard late in the afternoon. He gave a very slow and carefully read the statements of Franks and Mr. Veinhardt, had made a note of the statements, and then he had called the witness-box and had asked the witness to describe the man who had been called up by telephone from Scotland Yard late in the afternoon. He gave a very slow and carefully read the statements of Franks and Mr. Veinhardt, had made a note of the statements, and then he had called the witness-box and had asked the witness to describe the man who had been called up by telephone from Scotland Yard late in the afternoon.

The silence which held the lookers in the stuffy, court-house seemed to deepen as the witness continued to speak. The suggestions that many had lightly made, or listened to, that Franks had killed his wife, seemed suddenly to take tangible shape, almost to threaten certainty.

This calm, fresh complexioned detective was deftly and neatly linking the deadly chain of evidence. The eyes of all in court were fixed on him, now and then shifting to Jimmy Franks' face.

But the latter seemed perhaps the least interested of all present. Outwardly he was calm, but within a law in one of the links, but without avail.

Two of the servants in the hotel were next called, and the page-boy who had brought Franks's telegram, and had heard him express a threat to kill.

When Franks was again put into the witness-box and questioned as to why he was unable to give a satisfactory answer, he said that he could not explain why he had thrown the bottle and was upset into the fire-place. To each question addressed him his answer became more definite, until at last the tension placed on all present became unbearable.

If reason had not suggested their instincts would have told them that Jimmy Franks had murdered his wife.

But the reason, the cause? Inspector Heriot asked to be allowed to put Mr. Saintsbury into the witness-box again.

Outside the crowd waited patiently in the rain, increasing every moment. The clouds grew darker, and the grey mist crept up from the river. The gloom in the court-house increased, and here and there lights were lit which seemed to accentuate the darkness.

Very deliberately, as if choosing each word carefully, Mr. Saintsbury described his first meeting with Jimmy Franks, when he himself was a young man. Once or twice the crowd stopped him, remarking that his evidence seemed to have no bearing on the cause of the murder, until at last Inspector Heriot begged that the lawyer might be allowed to tell his story.

HAIR CAME OUT

Scalp in Very Bad Condition. Dandruff Could be Seen Plainly. Lost Most of Hair. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Cured.

42 Huppelcott St., Toronto, Ontario.—"About a year ago I had a very bad attack of dandruff and my scalp was in a very bad condition. The dandruff could be seen plainly and I lost most of my hair. My hair fell out gradually, and after having used Cuticura Soap to shampoo my hair, then rubbed the Cuticura Ointment into the scalp, the dandruff was very soon removed and my hair started falling out. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment cured me." (Signed) Miss R. Chaudhury, Mar. 24, 1912.

HANDS COVERED WITH ECZEMA
Anne C., Cap. Quebec.—"About one year ago my daughter had her hands covered with eczema. It broke out in a rash, she was unable to put her hands in water and she used to scratch them until they were red and inflamed and swollen and used to bleed. She was unable to sleep by reason of the pain and burning. We tried several remedies without receiving any relief. After she began washing with Cuticura Soap and applying Cuticura Ointment she got relief at once and after ten days' treatment was entirely cured."

"My baby when teething, broke out with pimples on her face. After three days' treatment of Cuticura Soap she was cured." (Signed) M. de Coudray, Feb. 12, 1912.

in his own way, and Saintsbury was allowed to go. His course was that he had practically forced Franks to break off his engagement with Iris de Fontaine and marry his daughter. He acknowledged that he was in financial difficulties, and admitted that while she was on their honeymoon he had written to his daughter for money. She had refused to send him any, and he gave her reasons—that she and her husband had quarrelled on their wedding night and were husband and wife in name only.

When he had finished, there was a sensation in the court. There was a gasp, and a murmur, and a look of surprise on the faces of the spectators. If Saintsbury could produce the letter, he replied that it had been destroyed by his daughter for fear that it would be used against her.

Mr. Saintsbury told the letter to the court. It was a letter from Aaron Roberts' voice rang clearly through the silent room. There was a startled murmur, a rustling of dress and shuffling of feet, which was by no means the least interesting feature of the trial.

The cries of "Order" had scarcely died away when another interruption occurred. A messenger had come from the court and announced that the jury was willing to sit late into the day if the adjournment could be postponed.

The excitement was painful in its intensity. Every person present, witnesses, officials, held their breath. The coroner did not seem anxious to accede to Heriot's request. Then the jury rose and announced that the jury was willing to sit late into the day if the adjournment could be postponed.

From the evidence we have already heard—he commenced unsteadily, when the coroner stopped him. He said that he had seen the body of his wife, the latter said, looking closely at Heriot, I'll order an adjournment.

Heilgoland, the tiny island in the North Sea which Germany proposes to turn into a great station for its ships, is one of the most curious islands in the world.

Its towering cliffs, for instance, are largely artificial. Some years ago there was great fear that the island, which was steadily growing smaller, would soon be eaten away entirely by the waves from the southwest.

But five million dollars has been spent on raising a massive cliff of granite on this exposed side.

On those parts of the coast where the red, porous rock of the genuine Heilgoland has long been an important naval center. It is defended by the most powerful guns, and is said to be the most important of the German fleet.

It is, indeed, the North Sea storehouse of the German fleet. The German fleet is said to be the most powerful of the German fleet.

Sounds From a Mainstay
It seems incredible that a beam of light could be made to produce sound, but such a thing can be done. A ray of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel containing lamp black colored oil or water, or any like substance. A disk having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light, so as to cut it up, thus causing alternate light and shadow. When one places his ear to the glass vessel he hears strange sounds so long as the flashing beam falls upon the vessel.

A still more extraordinary effect is produced when the beam of sunlight is made to pass through a prism, so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum. This disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now, if the ear be placed to the vessel containing the disk or other material, the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it, sounds will be given by the different parts of the spectrum, and these will be exceedingly strange.

For example, if the vessel contains red water, and the green light falls upon it, loud sounds will be given. Only one or two sounds will be heard when the red and the blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel. Other colors produce no sounds at all.

Green light gives out sound best in a glass vessel. The sound is given by the different parts of the spectrum, and these will be exceedingly strange.

A Post-Impression
George Lucks, whose paintings of children and old people made a reputation in a Fifth Avenue gallery, was talking about the post-impressionists.
But Lucks, said a magazine editor, what is a post-impressionist?
With a jolly laugh, Mr. Lucks replied:
"A post-impressionist, my dear fellow, is an artist who aims to give you the post-impression that he has ordered for more pictures than he can paint."

Interacting People
Of King Nicholas of Montenegro somebody writes that he stops people to examine their guns and pistols, and raises anybody who carries them unloaded—which recalls an anecdote related of himself by Count Molikoff, when, in 1882, he was crowned the crown prince of Prussia to Moscow to attend the coronation of Alexander II.

At a ball in the Kremlin Molikoff was introduced to a group of picturesque potentates from central Asia, with their girdles stuck full of daggers and knives, and the presence of Albanian manner and he begged to know whether these firearms of theirs were loaded. Why should I carry them if they were not loaded, replied the spokesman of the party; and in a letter to his English wife Molikoff confessed that he had never experienced such a set back all his life. Here at last, he said, I have found "an honest soldier" a man who is what he looks and means what he says.

All along the road to Lexington from Cambridge, Mass., there are monuments to rebel colonists who slew British soldiers on April 19, 1775, but the most striking is that of Samuel Whittemore. He was 80 years old at the time and he killed three British soldiers with his own hand. The stone records that for this he received punishment of three floggings. He was shot, he was bayoneted, he was hanged, and he was then reasonably thought for dead. The old fellow must have had a magnificent constitution and an spirit which the most devoted optimist might envy. For the inscription goes on to say that he recovered and lived to the age of 98.

Mr. Roosevelt's successful count of his glances to win his libel action contains precious counsel for those of England 80 years ago. G. W. E. Russell recounts: Mr. Gladstone, conspicuous for his Oxford days for his moderation in the use of words, told me that until Sir Andrew Clark limited him on grounds of health to a certain number of glances a day, he was thought of counting them. One drank what was put in one's glass without counting or questioning.

His Bequest
One of the briefest and queerest wills on record is that of an old western farmer who was reputed to be rich, died penniless. His will ran: "In the name of God, amen. There's no more to be said. I leave the earth. My relations have always wanted that. They can have it."

Blankets of Bark
They have trees for blankets in Ecuador, and they like them, too. They are fond of the firm touch of the bark against their bodies. They are fond of the firm touch of the bark against their bodies. They are fond of the firm touch of the bark against their bodies.

Carried Weight
That was the heaviest storm I ever saw. How much did it weigh? I don't know, but it had things its own way.

WHEN AN AIRMAN SHOULD QUIT

Once the Nerve is Gone a Man Should Fly No More

He who flies constantly must look to one personal risk, which may vary according to the characteristics of the individual. This is the danger a man may incur by becoming a little careless while in the air. There is the present time, in fact, that familiarity breeds contempt—not actual contempt—but a temporary relaxation of vigilance, and piloting an airplane needs such watchfulness, such minute precision, that any slowness on the part of the man at the wheel, or lever, represents a peril that is very real.

The pilot who flies a great deal should realize himself constantly that there is no room for error in the handling of aircraft.
A loss of confidence not difficult to understand is suffered by an airman, sometimes, after he has been the victim of a serious fall, and in similar circumstances a jockey, or say a racing motorist, may be robbed of nerve and when a pilot loses judgment, as the outcome of a bad mishap, his wisest course is to cease to fly. With a broken nerve, he is a menace to himself and to others as well. Claude Graham White, in the National Review.

Anglo-Russian Friendship

A practical suggestion to help the Anglo-Russian friendship was made by Bayly, Imperial Russian consul-general for Great Britain, who inspected a big gathering of Boy Scouts at Chelmsford recently. The baron remarked that chivalry and knightliness of medieval centuries had been lost, but the fundamental idea of serving not oneself, but others, was excellent and worthy of praise. The boy scouts of our day were a revival and at the same time an improvement upon medieval chivalry. They were the little knights of our time.

Replying to a vote of thanks by Assistant Commissioner Martin, who was in command, Baron Bayly said he could not help thinking that it would be a good thing if it could be arranged, for some of them to visit the Russian scouts—the Potemkin. They were different to the English Scouts, but their ideal was the same, and he was quite sure that such a visit would help to foster Anglo-Russian friendship and relations. He would be delighted to arrange for their reception in Russia.

He Agreed Too Soon

The celebrated French poet, Saint-Pol, who is said to have a large income was always in debt, said one day in a barber's shop waiting to be shaved. He was talking with the door open and a tradesman entered who happened to be one of the poet's largest creditors. No sooner did this man see Saint-Pol than he angrily demanded his money. The poet composedly begged him not to make a scene.

"Won't you wait for the money until I am shaved?" he asked the other, pleased at the prospect.

Saint-Pol then made the barber a witness of the agreement, and immediately he took a towel, wiped the hair from his face and left the shop. He wore a beard to the end of his days.

A Homely Thing
An enthusiastic young settlement worker, in her kindness of heart, decided to take to the seashore a little six year old child who had never breathed purer air than that of a city street.

Jennie's delight will do me good, she said to those who expatiated on the kindergarten. That day, on my vacation to see her growing rowdy. How she will enjoy it!

But the town which Jennie was a young woman with views of her own. As the train drew into the station of the seaside resort they could see from the car window a wide stretch of beach and sea.

Look, Jennie, exclaimed her philosopher companion. There is the ocean!

Bursting into tears, Jennie flung herself, sobbing, into the arms of her friend. Oh, say, ain't it homely, she cried.

On the Lion
A Baltimore man, interested in the education of the young, recently visited Washington and had his first lesson after the first exercises the visitor was asked to put a few questions to the pupils. To a boy of 5 the caller said:

Have you ever seen a lion's skin?
Yes, sir, came in ringing tones from the youngster.
And where? asked the visitor, impressed with the child's earnestness.
On the lion, answered the boy.

A girl exclaimed: How romantic! when she hears of an engagement; a man: How tedious.

Had Doubts
I am going to go up in an airship. I'd not care to do that, too, only I am afraid that the flying might materialize.

It is much easier to be good when living with people who laugh than those who always notice that the wind is in the east.

Builds Houses for Birds
A picturesque method of fighting an insect pest from the train windows at Marshfield, a wide, outlying log house, dotted over with white bird houses on stakes.

The owner of the log, Capt. B. C. Cahoon, invented this method of fighting certain pests destructive to cranberry vines and berries some thirty years ago, and is still enthusiastic over the success of the plan.

Capt. Cahoon has installed 100 new bird boxes of a seventeen acre bog, thus inviting and surely housing a large colony of swallows, whose aid in occupation will be to sweep down upon obnoxious moths from their cottage watch towers.

The little houses are placed three feet apart, on tall stakes, following the line of the ditch crossings, having the ends of the ditch walls white, so as to be seen from the right point of view, but merely scattered about when looked at from across the bog.

Looking down the line the dashing white cottages, each nearly topped by its stake, lifted high above the soft, gray green level of the bog, when seen from the right point of view, but merely scattered about when looked at from across the bog.

Western Recognition of the Great Work the C.P.R. is Doing for Canada

The confirmation of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy of the intention of the C.P.R. to expend $100,000,000 in the extension of its lines and perfection of its system is the best evidence of the present time as a place of very welcome news. Indeed, and furnishes a significant opportunity for the people of Canada to review the situation and examine into the relations which subsist between the Dominion of Canada and this great corporation. When the evidence of a world wide trade depression which is now coming on is to be seen on all sides, and at this particular time, appears like a veritable rift in the clouds before the storm has had time to break.

We have all heard of the C.P.R. dammed for one thing and another and many of us may have done a bit of it ourselves. At times when we didn't happen to think that things were coming sufficiently our way; but nevertheless there is there, another corporation that has been thoroughly identified itself with the interests of a country as this mammoth railway and steamship company has done.

Caring for Caged Birds
Vegetable food of some kind is a necessity for the caged bird. A lettuce leaf, water cress, a small piece of apple, a grape or a small piece of raw potato if there is nothing else should be given every day. The staple food should be canary seed mixed with a small percentage of fruit and golden millet, but occasionally, in cold weather add a little hem seed.

Should the bird's nails grow too long, take him in your hand, loosely, but firmly, hold his feet in a cup of warm, soapy water for several minutes to soften the nails, then cut the extreme end with a pair of sharp nail clippers.

A bird should be accustomed to having a bath every morning. The best best plan to encourage this is to remove the bottom of the cage, put a small dish of water on a shelf of paper, and set the top of the cage over it. Many birds have to be coaxed into taking a bath, and it is well to have them accustomed to it, it will help matters to remove the seed and water dishes. After he has bathed hang the cage in a warm place so that there may be no fear of the bird becoming chilled.

I suffered greatly for several days and the tooth cuts refused to heal until your agent gave me a bottle of MINAID'S LINIMENT, which I began using. The effect was magical; in five hours the pain had ceased and in two weeks the wounds had completely healed and my hand and arm were as well as ever.

Neuralgic Condition Of the Nerves

In this age of nervous disorders neuralgia is fearfully common. The thousands of cases of neuralgia in the head or splitting headache, but neuralgia may affect any part of the body in which there are sensitive nerve centres. The teeth are often blamed and extracted in error when the cause of the trouble is the impoverished condition of the blood and the starved nervous system.

While neuralgic pains are usually sharp and shooting, and consequently difficult to locate, the seat of trouble is usually sore and tender under pressure.

Kyanize Your Floors

Kyanize Floor Finish is a liquid preparation made expressly to stand the scuff and tread of heavy shoes and the continual hard usage the surface of a floor has to stand. And it goes without saying that a finish that will stand the abuse it gets on the floor will do satisfactory work on standing finish such as

Doors, Wainscoting and Furniture, and we therefore sell as much Kyanize for interior work as we do for floors, linoleums and oil cloths
